

Water District Hires Bureau's Project Chief

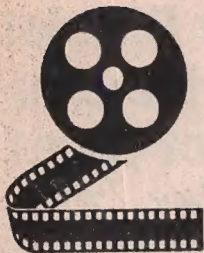

14 Aug 1991

Kirt Carpenter, chief of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's Utah Projects Office, will be going to work for the Central Utah Water Conservancy District as the assistant projects director, beginning Aug. 26, according to Don Christiansen, general manager of the district.

The bill authorizing funding to complete the Central Utah Project, which has been passed by the House, transfers the responsibility for finishing the project from the Bureau to the District, including construction of the Jordanelle Dam. As Utah projects chief, Carpenter has been in charge of the dam construction for the Bureau.

Christiansen said Carpenter will be working under Chief Engineer Sheldon R. Talbot.

"[Carpenter] will be working primarily with the consulting engineers that we have contracted with to assist us in planning and engineering the various features of the CUP Completion Act that will be approved by Congress this Fall," explained Christiansen.
